Lexinoron, Va., October 9.—Maurice Powell, an aged and well-known farmer of this county, was found dead in an isolated spot near Cedar Grove has night, he having been killed by the overturning of his wagon, under which his remains were found. Late Sunday afternoon he left home with a one-horse team, a light spring-wagon, but gave no indication as to where he was going. His absence created no alarm until Tuesday, when his horse returned home. Search was then made and after some time his body was found. It is thought he was instantly killed Sunday night wandering over the mountain with his team.

Chase City, Va., October 9, 1889.

An appointment had been made for a political meeting here last night, and instead of a small attendance, to the surprise of the most enthusiastic Democrats there was a large outpouring of the people. It evidenced a desire to hear a discussion of the political issues of the campaign.

The meeting was held in a large warehouse, well arranged, and District-Chairman F. B. Roberts, the mayor of our town, introduced Mr. James H. Hutcherson, the candidate for the House of Delegates. Mr. Hutcherson made a splendid speech, and I may the adjective in no laudatory meaning, but such an address would have given credit to older heads. He is a young man, and in this his maiden effort has shown that neither the confidence nor the honor of his party have been misplaced.

After his speech E. Cook Ogburn, Esq., introduced Mr. J. McD. Blake, a gentleman, who from extensive travel and asso-
